A diptych is a painting consisting of two separated parts. In the past, this solution was used to present couples or sacred scenes. In this exhibition the artists expand the topic: the bright and the dark side, the good and the bad, the nice and the ugly The diptychs are thus complementary faces of a description, supplemented by a suspicion, which is generated by the concept of this exhibition: two openings/vernissages take place, whereby at the first opening only one part of each diptych is shown and a week later on the second opening, the unveiling of the respective second part takes place.

Things are not always what they seem to be at first glance. You must (or if you prefer: can) try to look deeper to understand better. In life there are so many variations that lead life itself into different directions: One look, one word, one behaviour can determine the future of some and - in the end - will determine the future of each.
